Place nail form under BROKEN OR SHORT NAIL.

Apply powder with wet brush just like nail polish.

As nail hardens, remove nail form. Nail looks and feels completely real; is now ready for filing and polishing.

And these nails are so sturdy, nail biters can't chew them or bite them off. Colored nail polish stays on your GLAMA NAIL longer . . . and nail polish remover takes polish off quicker and easier. You'll be thrilled with results you never imagined possible.

A NEW BEAU

CAROLE was going steady with Ed. Nancy was going steady with Jimmy. And here it was, only two weeks away from summer vacation and who was Lorie going steady with? NOBODY!

"And what am I going to do all summer vacation? No chance to meet any kids with school out . . . and that darned summer job at Clarke's Department Store's going to keep me away from the beach so I can't even see any of the kids!"

All in all, Lorie's life looked pretty grim.

The telephone rang, and even before Lorie answered it, she knew who it was going to be. She picked up the receiver and said, "Hi, Carole."

"Hi . . . boy, did Eddie and I have a good time last night at the dance . . ." Carole started.

"Please spare me all the details," Lorie told her. "My mental outlook is too depressing to hear about all the good times everybody else has."

"Well," Carole began again, somewhat piqued, "I'm sure it's not my fault that you broke up with Kenny just before all the end-of-the-year festivities at school."

"No, but that's no sign you have to gloat!" Lorie countered. "You know very well that Kenny's behavior was absolutely . . ."

"I know . . . but I thought maybe you'd be interested in knowing that Gloria Chambers doesn't think so. She was at the dance with Kenny last night."

"Oh, thank you very much for that latest news bulletin,"

Lorie gulped and went back to the chair and put her chin in her hands.

"I've certainly got myself in a fine pickle," Lorie thought. "Now Kenny's absolutely out of the question!" There was no getting around it. She had thought that if another Saturday night went by without a date, she could start the rumor on the grapevine that she would not be against going steady with Kenny again, but now . . .

But another Saturday did go by without a date, and then the school year was over. She did go to the Prom with Dick, but though he was awfully nice, Lorie would have to admit they didn't have much fun.

Then, one bright Monday morning, she started the job at Clarke's Department Store.

"I suppose the situation could be worse," she told herself. "I could be selling children's shoes or something equally as grim." She put her elbows on the glass counter top and thought, "At least I'm in 'Jewelry'. Sometimes a fellow does come in to pick out something for a friend."

But the next two days were very depressing. Lorie found out that fellows did come in to buy jewelry, but mostly for their girl friends or fiancées. And Lorie spent almost an hour trying to pick out a suitable brooch for one very good-looking boy, only to find that he was just passing through town.

The third day on the job, Gloria Chambers came in.

"Ooooh, Lorie," she almost shouted. "I didn't know you were working this summer."

And the accent she put on the word "working" sounded as if she put it in the same category as eating dirt.

"Well, I am," Lorie glared back. "And I'm enjoying it too. Is there anything you want to buy, or are you just one of those people who come in to look all day?"

"I was planning on buying something sparkly," Gloria told her in an aloof tone. "Something to wear with my white formal at the Country Club Dance." Then, as if an afterthought, she said, "Kenny and I are going, you know."

It took a second or two for the news to sink in, then Lorie had to make an almost super-human effort to control herself.

"Just what, precisely, did you have in mind?" she asked stonily.

"I thought maybe you'd know the kind of thing Kenny liked best," Gloria replied. "After all, you know him so much better than I do," she added acidly.

Lorie brought a tray of costume jewelry to the counter and said, "Just look these over, and I'll be right back." She went over to another clerk at the counter and said, "Janice, would you take that customer, I'm going on my relief now."

Sitting over a coke up in the company cafeteria, Lorie decided she had had just about enough. That was the last straw. Sure, she could use the money, but this was too great a sacrifice. She'd just tell the personnel director that she was giving a week's notice, and she'd have to get herself back into circulation again.

Her mind made up definitely, she trudged on back to the jewelry counter again. She stood against the counter, idly appraising her fingernails and mentally practicing her speech of resignation.

"Could you help me?" echoed in her ear in deep masculine tones.

As she turned, she saw a tanned young man smiling at her. Oddly enough, he looked vaguely familiar.

"Hey," he said as he got a good look at her face, "you're Lorie Godwin, aren't you?"

"Yes," Lorie admitted, "but I don't think . . ."

"I'm Pete Larson . . . you remember, we were freshmen together. My family moved to Florida for the last couple of years, but we're back up here to stay now."

"Well, gee . . ." Lorie said something else appropriate, and she heard herself carry on a fairly intelligent conversation with Pete, but her mind was reflecting on how handsome Pete had gotten, and how he'd grown up.

As if in answer to her own thoughts, Pete said, "Say, you've really grown up, Lorie!"

Lorie took it in her stride and smiled bewitchingly. There was one awkward moment, then she said, "Did you . . . uh . . . want to buy any jewelry?"

"Oh, yes," Pete replied, brought back to the present moment with a jerk. "My mother's birthday is tomorrow. Dad's having a little party for her at the Country Club, then we're all staying for the dance. I just wanted to pick up some earrings or something."

Lorie came to the rescue gallantly. She showed him just the right thing, and he bought them right away. As she gave him back his change and wrapped present, she smiled again.

"Well, I'll see you around town quite a bit, I suppose," she said, hoping it was enough of an opening for him to ask her for a date.

"I suppose," he said. Then, "Thanks again, Lorie," and waved and disappeared into the shopping crowds.

Lorie stood there with the frozen smile on her lips. "That corks it," she thought ruefully. "Pete Larson is probably the only boy in town not going steady or away on vacation. And his mother won't have another birthday for a whole year . . ."

The closing gong found her in the same mood, and she was still reflecting on her speech of resignation as she left the store at the employees' exit. But a honking horn broke into her train of thought. She saw a bright yellow convertible parked at the curb, and there behind the wheel sat Pete, smiling and motioning for her to hop in.

As she settled in the deep leather seat beside him, she gulped her thanks.

"Glad I caught you before you left," he said. Lorie tried to decipher his unemotional tones by looking at his face, but it was turned toward the evening traffic. He couldn't even look at her long enough to smile.

Finally he pulled the car up at the curb in front of her house. Then, and only then, did he turn to look at her.

"I did remember where you lived, didn't I?" he asked.

"Why, yes," Lorie answered. "I didn't think you would."

"I remember lots of things about you, Lorie," Pete told her with a shy smile. Then he fairly blurted out, "Will you go to the Country Club Dance with me?"

After a proper amount of surprise and bewilderment, Lorie finally said, "Sure, Pete . . ." and the arrangements were made.

"You know," Pete told her, walking her up to her front door, "I'm glad you're working this summer."

She turned, wondering if he were joking.

". . . Because I'm working too, for my father," he explained. "He just gave me this afternoon off to pick out mother's present."

"I know how you feel," she told him truthfully. "Everybody else is down at the beach . . ."

Pete took her hand. "There's still a lot to do on week ends," he said and smiled.

And somehow, the summer seemed to grow brighter and brighter to Lorie. It didn't matter any more that all the other girls would be having fun with someone else. She had the feeling that this would be the nicest summer she ever had!
